Industrial Video & Control Announces Distribution Agreement with ADI Global Distribution for Hazardous Area Video Cameras

Newton, MA – March 9, 2020 – Industrial Video & Control (IVC), the leading provider of industrial video solutions for hazardous environments, announced that ADI Global Distribution will distribute IVC’s best-selling certified CCTV cameras throughout North America. ADI customers will now have access to IVC’s comprehensive line of video surveillance solutions that specifically address the needs of challenging environments.

“We are excited to partner with ADI and bring our specialized video solutions to their extensive North American customer base,” stated Dipak Sagar, business development manager for IVC. “Across industries, we’re seeing a growing demand for video solutions that are specifically engineered for industrial environments. Our hazardous area product line meets strict industry requirements for safety that can’t be met with traditional video solutions, particularly in the aerospace, manufacturing, and oil and gas industries.”

“At ADI, we continuously review our product portfolio to ensure our dealers have the solutions they need to build complete, integrated security systems,” said Marco Cardazzi, global vice president of marketing at ADI Global Distribution. “We are excited to expand our offering with IVC’s line of video surveillance cameras to help our dealers offer protection in challenging environments.”

As part of the distribution agreement, ADI will carry IVC’s line of explosion proof cameras including the AMZ-HD41-3: a rugged, compact, 3x optical zoom IP camera; the AMZ-3041-2: a compact analog camera; and the APTZ-3045 series of pan/tilt/zoom cameras. The APTZ-3045-xx camera line includes analog, IP, and digital (3G-SDI) options. Engineered and manufactured in the United States, the cameras are certified for use in hazardous areas and are rated for Class I Division 1, ATEX and IECEx environments. They are also compliant with NDAA 2019 section 889.

IVC’s certified hazardous area video cameras are available immediately from ADI Global Distribution.
